

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The foundation of this book is my dissertation, which I completed at Georgetown University in Washington, DC in 2008, after studying sociolinguistics there. Now that my dissertation is done and this book is being published, I want to once more express my sincere and heartfelt gratitude to each and everyone who contributed pieces big or small to my doctoral enterprise, and without whom it could not have been completed. They include: René Andeßner, Rudolf Angerer, Iris and Martin Bauer, Kate Billings, Helga and Fritz Blaimschein, Susi Blaimschein and friends, Jeannette Blalock, Andrea Burgstaller, Chen Ru San, Rudolf de Cillia, Jeff Connor-Linton, Nikolas Coupland, Heinz Dobler, Hans Dolinar, Niko Donath, Gudrun Dornetshuber, Irene Dyk-Ploß, Irene Eckart, Bernhard Etzlinger, Lyn Fogle, Stephan Gaisbauer, Erwin Gierlinger, Ulrike Greiner, Hermann Gruber, Edith Grünwald, the GU Melody family, Mika Hama, Erika and Norris Hillery and family, Gina Himmer, Maj-Britt Höglund, Veronika Hübl, Alice Kim, Kathrin Kordon, Matt Krause, Rachel Le Noan, Pia Lane, Franz Lichtenberger, Christoph Litschauer, Christian Löffler, Jia Jackie Lou, Alistair Mackie, Rosa Maier, Kurt Matzler, Anahit Minasyan and colleagues at the UNESCO Intangible Heritage Section, Amira Mitchell, Sylvia Moosmüller, Peter Nessler and the Nessler family, Helga and Hans Novotny, Sonja Novotny, the Odom family, Alessandra Parisi, Susan Philips, Heidi and Reinhard Pichler, Heribert Pichler, Eva Prammer-Semmler, Alexandra Rieser, Kerstin Rosenow, Lucy Russell, Josef Sageder, Sigrid Scheichlbauer and Christoph Schneider, Hannes Scheutz, Martin Schlögl, my aunt Eleonore Schmidberger, Clemens Schwarzinger, Jennifer Sclafani, Karin Seidlhuber, Johann and Elisabeth Soukup, Katharina Soukup-Altrichter and Herbert Altrichter, Andreas Springer, Alexandra Steinbauer-Toifl and Christoph Steinbauer, Frauke Steinhoff, Anton and Elisabeth Striedinger, Eeva Taimisto, Anna Marie Trester, Franz Wagner, Wendy Wilson, the Witches Linz, Ruth Wodak, and Rainer Zepf, and all participants in my attitude survey.

I furthermore thank all my colleagues and the linguistics faculty at Georgetown University for making my years of graduate study there a greatly rewarding personal as well as intellectual experience and a wonderful adventure. I am particularly indebted to professors Ralph Fasold, Heidi Hamilton, Kendall King, Deborah Schiffirin, Ron Scollon, and Deborah Tannen for teaching, guiding, and inspiring me throughout my career at Georgetown. Many thanks also to Manela Diez, Erin Esch, Arlene Cook, and Lissy March at the Georgetown Linguistics Department, who made/ make academic life there possible. I am furthermore thankful for the funding I received via the GU Linguistics Department, which has enabled me to pursue my studies there in the first place. But the biggest thanks go to my mentor Natalie Schilling-Estes, whose inspiring classes first sparked the ideas for my thesis, and whose continued and kind moral and academic support, guidance, and encouragement successfully steered me through the ups and downs of the dissertation writing process, for which I am deeply grateful to her.

Before I went to Georgetown, I got a master's degree at the University of Vienna, Austria, where I was so fortunate as to be taught and guided by professors Herbert Schendl (who also greatly helped with the publication of this book as series editor), Ute Smit, and Henry Widdowson, who all first led me to discover and develop my 'inner sociolinguist'. To them, too, I express my warmest thanks.

In truth, this enterprise would never have succeeded if it hadn't also been for the best personal support network one could have wished for. In the U.S., the great friendship of Najma Al Zidjaly, Rachael Allbritten, Zhaleh Feizollahi, and Kate Luongo was what kept me going even when the going was tough. In Linz, Austria, Gabi Hardinger and Sabine Pöschel were great champions of my dissertation from day one. And in Vienna, I am forever happily indebted and grateful to Ilse Krenauer, Katrin Löffler, Renate Maier, Vera Mitrenga, Irene Schweitzer, and Andrea Wielander for a wonderful friendship dating back to when we first started out at Uni Wien many years ago and which has since seen us through many things together. It meant so much to me to be welcomed by them with open arms every time I got back from the U.S. and to simply pick up the conversation where we left off, without missing a beat. Vielen, vielen Dank.

Lastly, I cannot ever thank my family enough - my parents Irmtraud and Richard Soukup, and my brother Michael with his wife Karin and his daughter Victoria. They keep me rooted, they give me strength, they make it all possible.
