The Department of Finance at the University of St Andrews Business School, in cooperation with the Department of Finance, University of Vienna, and the Center for Ethics in Society, Saint Anselm College, announces a call for proposals for an interdisciplinary conference on economics, ethics, and global governance in banking and finance.

The current economic turmoil driven by war, geopolitical tension and inflation is amplifying uncertainties and instability. As such, banking systems are again entering the centre stage, together with unregulated crypto markets and a lack of integration of international financial markets. These developments raise again questions about ethical behaviour in business, socially responsible investments, governance, risk-taking and protective regulation. Topics of particular interest include, but are not limited to:

- Resiliency and Sustainability
- Banks Ownership
- Corporate Governance
- Social responsibility
- Supply-Chain, International Commerce
- Financial Integration and Innovation
- Ethics
- Global Governance.

The goal of this interdisciplinary conference is to bring together ethicists, economists, political scientists, international relations scholars, policy experts, and business leaders to examine how banking, international trade and investments can be conducted more ethically in a post-pandemic and conflict context.

Submissions: Please submit an extended abstract or full paper (full papers will be given priority). We will accept proposals for individual presentations, entire panels (3-5 presentations per panel), or moderated roundtable discussions. All proposals may be submitted via email to Dr Maria Chiara Iannino, mci@st-andrews.ac.uk, by 31st August 2023, and replies will be provided by mid-September. All presenters will be required to submit completed papers by 1st November 2023.
